Qualitative Research Interviews: Making Connections

One-on-one, semi-structured interviews are a dynamic and widely used qualitative research method across diverse disciplines. Research interviews, as a form of qualitative data collection, are ideal for understanding the subjective and situated experiences, perspectives, practices and language of research collaborators—within any given context. During this intensive workshop, participants will learn how to design generative interview questions, examine power relations and ethical considerations, and experiment with hands-on interview techniques and audiovisual possibilities.
